

Big Game Shooting on the Equator

Captain Francis Arthur Dickinson (1874-1915) was an officer in the British army and a first rate big game hunter. Due to Dickinson's notoriety as a great big game hunter he was selected by Winston Churchill to escort him on big game hunts while Churchill was Under Secretary of State for the African Colonies. In this book Captain Dickinson takes us back to Africa, whose beauty and mysterious fascination he feelingly describes. His pleasantly written pages leave on his readers' mind the impression of a cheery, good-hearted sportsman who enjoys every moment of his life, without perhaps going very deeply below the surface: a keen observer and student of animal life and habits, if not exactly a profound naturalist. His wanderings have been far from the beaten track, in the wilds of Equatorial Africa, and he relates his experiences in a breezy manner which has its charm. The illustrations of Big Game Shooting on the Equator, reproduced from photographs, are excellent.
