

Journals of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, Vol. 6 (Classic Reprint)

Introduction THE sessions of two of the Great and General Courts of the Province of the Massachusetts-Bay those of 1724 and 1725 are printed in this volume, the sixth of the series. The Court of 1724 assembled May 27, 1724, was prorogued June 20, again met on November ii and continued to sit until December 24. These two sessions constituted the life of the House of 1724. The Court of 1725 met May 26, 1725, was prorogued June 24, again assembled November 3 and remained in a session of unusual length, and with an adjournment of ten days, till prorogued January 17, 1726. A third session began April 13, 1726, and was dissolved the next day. No journal of its proceedings was printed. The war against the eastern Indians, declared by the General Court of 1722-23, continued through the two years and naturally engaged much of the attention of the Court. Unfortunately the rule against printing votes on the war, passed November 15, 1723, remained in force and deprived the record of an historical feature of no small importance. The great attention given to bounties, aids or compensation for the injured, provision for the families of the killed, and the detail of the muster-rolls, proves how much of the time of the Court was engrossed by those necessary accompaniments to the war. Rich as the record is in names of those who served to their cost, it cannot make up for the exclusion of votes and reports on policy and special measures, most of which have been lost without leaving so much as a mention. The war called for defensive as well as offensive operations, costly and not too successful in results. At Northfield a new block-house held a garrison of whites and Indians, and the apprehensions of the people on this frontier led to a reinforcement for the threatened towns of Northfield, Deerfield and Brownfield. At the same time a force sent eastward received instruction
