

The Christian Codependent: When Our Loving Hearts Become Bleeding Hearts

This book is designed to help Christian people who are loving and suffering. Christians, because of their faith and certain Biblical teachings, will endure dysfunctional relationships just like people who are diagnosed as being codependent. Codependent people love and give, but their needs are not met. They live with frustration, constant disappointment, hidden anger, and false hope. They love the takers of this world, and they have serious control issues as they become enablers in the process of their loving and giving. The author examines the question, does God intend His followers to be harmed and destroyed by love? She proves, through scripture, the nature of Godly love. She uses lots of stories about real people to illustrate how love can get twisted and how to break the cycle of pain with Gods help. She wrote this book to help people of faith learn about healthy boundaries to promote love of self and well-being. She wrote this book to help people connect with God and to experience the joy of genuine, Godly love. Ms. Immen, herself, is both a Christian and a professional counselor. She wrote this book as a result of her own battle with codependency as her marriage of twenty-three years came to an end. She writes from a personal perspective and hopes her insights will help others.
