

Narrative of a Voyage to the Pacific and Beerings Strait, to Co-Operate With the Polar Expeditions (Classic Reprint)

The discovery of a north-west passage to the Pacific had for some years occupied the attention of the British government and of the public at large, and several brilliant attempts had been made both by sea and by land to ascertain the practicability of its navigation, which, though conducted with a zeal and perseverance that will transmit them to the latest posterity, had, from insurmountable difficulties, failed of success. In 1824. His late Majesty having commanded that another attempt should be made by way of Prince Regent s Inlet, an expedition was equipped the last that sailed upon this interesting service and the command again conferred upon Captain Parry, whose exploits have so deservedly earned him the approbation of his country. At the same time Captain Franklin, undaunted by his former perilous expedition, and by the magnitude of the contemplated undertaking, having with the promptness and perseverance peculiar to his character, proposed to connect his brilliant discoveries at the mouth of the Coppermine River with the furthest known point on the western side of A merica, by descending the Mackenzie River, and, with the assistance of his intrepid associate. Dr. Richardson, by coasting the northern shore in opposite directions towards the two previously discovered points, His late Majesty was also pleased to command that this expedition should be simultaneously undertaken. From the nature of these services it was nearly impossible that either of these expeditions could arrive at the open sea in Beering s Strait, without having nearly, if not wholly, exhausted their resources ;and Captain Franklin sparty being, in addition, destitute of a conveyance to a place whence it could return toE(Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and dont occur in the book.)About the Publisher Forgotten Books is a publisher of historical writings, such as: Philosophy, Classics, Science,
