

Innovations in Diabetes Management with Food and Drinks

Food and beverage companies are increasingly using a science driven approach to development new products which target diabetes as the role of the food and drinks industry is shifts towards a more benefit driven and preventative approach. At the same time regulations in this competitive marketplace are evolving to encourage innovation whilst protect consumer safety. This is particularly pertinent given the gap between the regulation of supplements and that of functional ingredients. This report reviews the business strategies of leading companies in the development of novel products that can improve blood glucose control and weight management. It discusses the changes in regulation, reviews health claims associated with functional ingredients and supplements and highlights the important role of personalized nutrition in the treatment and prevention of diabetes.
