

Notes From The Future

Cracking science fiction featuring an emerging Chinese dynasty trying to hold together the damaged remains of the Earth after a brutal, three-way war with the US of A and a madman's clone army. Emperor Kong Jia I and his cross-dressing maniac of an army Commander are out for revenge on President Jeffrey Laws and his clone-hating Neu-Kristians who've left the Earth on the verge of collapse. The exiles new home, the Moon, becomes the New Lunar Colonies, a religious hotbed and springpad for outer solar system exploration. Laws and company, building the biggest spaceship the worlds have ever seen, extracting souls and fast-fertilising females, need water and air and plan control of the long line of Intermundial Space Stations, all in Chinese hands. The warmonger Colonel Belgbog Bulgakov is exiled on Mars, his three million strong clone army that had come so close to taking over the Earth, decimated. Meanwhile the innocent populace of the worlds, clone animals and Second humans, struggle to come to terms with who and what they are, new Gods arising while the auld citizens of the Earth break out in age-old open rebellion against Imperial tyranny. There is no peace in the future. But there are a few laughs and plenty of excitement.
