

Remarriage Guide: Marrying Again & Again

The Remarriage Guide is one chapter on the unique issues about marrying for the second, third, fourth or more times then I include five chapters from my Married Life Guide. Remarriage means youve been burnt once in the love game or your spouse died. Divorces which lead to what are unceremoniously called broken families are a fact of life. More people get divorced than ever before, about half and many will remarry often very quickly after the divorce, some spinning the wheel several times in search of true love. A lot of people are afraid of remarriage. They feel they look foolish, too old, too burnt out, too foolish too be trying for romance again.

The insecurity is monumental, people worrying if they will fail again. There are many cases of people going for four or more marriages and not stopping until they find love or die trying. Dont be embarrassed. Be happy for yourself. When kids try to get to you, keep your mouth shut rather than spew venom back at them. Make friends with them. Scold them in private away from other kids. You can be romantic in front of them, just keep it lukewarm. Help your children adjust to their new life. You can still be friends with you ex and in-laws or ignore them if you choose, it doesnt matter. Dont trash your ex to your new spouse, just be polite about it. Remarriages could be just as traumatic as first marriages. Theres no law etched in stone that says you learned anything from the first marriage to help make you a better lover this time around. A remarriage may be the fastest way out of poverty for a woman without any marketable skills but there are stresses and pressures on second marriages not apparent with first marriage like the baggage of kids and ex-spouses plus the expectations of you and everyone else to see if youre capable of making a go of it or if its something in you that causes failure in marriages. If youre not good at relationships, spinning the wheel again wont necessarily make it right. The two most important factors to making a marriage work are commitment and withhold judgment when your spouse makes you mad. Unrealistic expectations often come down to reality after a few months and then you see the real people behind the masks and can determine whether you will make it or not right around then. People are brainwashed into wanting a perfect traditional family and subconsciously expecting the new spouse to be everything the old spouse wasnt but its not true. Stepfamilies arent like traditional families because you cant impose your free will on the new kids that are not yours biologically and that distance will always be there. Love takes time for new spouses and new kids. Just because youve been through it once doesnt necessarily make you entitled to it the second time around. Dont look to remarriage as a form of rescue. Dont do it unless you feel true love there. The usual trend is that people are cynical about love immediately after a divorce but some go on the rebound right away looking for a partner while others generally start looking again after about a year or two. Children shouldnt come first. It should be you two as a couple who love each other enough such that the children feel it and it rubs off to create a relatively happy family. Give the kids time to grieve for the loss of the old family. Dont expect them to warm up to your new flame right away. Dont just tell them once. Keep repeating whats going on. Tell them where they will live, go to school, with whom, etc. Listen to them. Be nice to your stepchildren. Many remarried people have problems with the former spouse who doesnt quite want to let go, may be jealous of the new spouse and try to sabotage it on some level. Dont do anything rash after your first marriage like get a tubal ligation or a vasectomy because you never know what will happen in your future. You will each be outsiders
