

360 at 50: A Grandparents Guide to Raising Children All Over Again

A heartbreaking, personal, non-fiction account of a young grandmother's journey in raising her grandchildren. Her life took a 360-degree turn in a very important sense: A mother at nineteen, she found herself raising children all over again... thirty years later. This time, they were five in number. Her grandchildren had been exposed to drugs, domestic violence, physical abuse and neglect, as well as having been dragged down the human cheese-grater of a broken foster care system for nearly two years, even before the final blow of losing their mother to drug addiction. Throughout the book, she employs the flashback narrative technique through personal notations and memoirs to refer to conversations and struggles with her daughter concerning her mental health issues, her drug addiction and the proverbial red flags which as a young parent she had lacked the experience to identify. Appended to the book is a second book dedicated to her daughter Lindsey. Its a compilation of poetic emotions from her grandchildren and family - a journey through grieving and healing. The book is a great read for grandparents seeking answers on guardianship, preparing for placement of grandchildren, children's mental health, financial resources and more.
